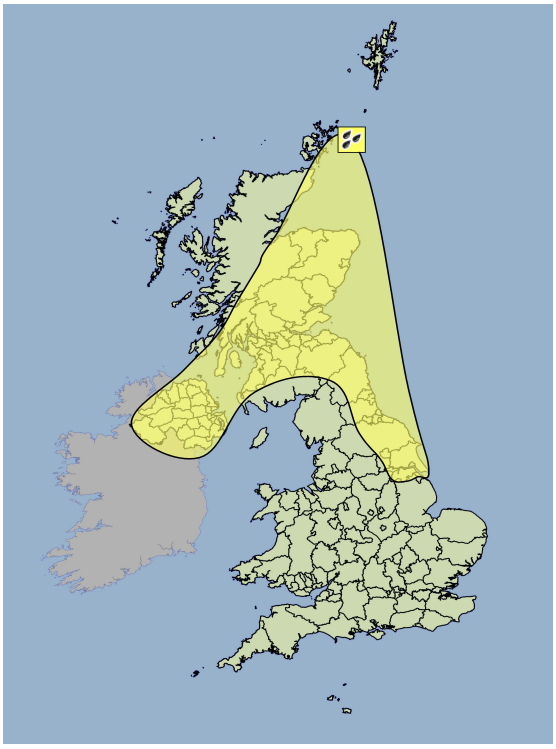
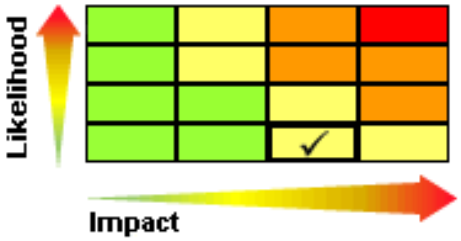
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Whilst the worst of yesterday's thundery activity has now become confined to northeast Scotland, further heavy, thundery showers are likely to develop across other parts of Scotland, the northeast of England and, later, across Northern Ireland. There is a risk of 20-40 mm of rain falling within a few hours locally, although, as is often the case, many places will miss the showers.

This is an update to the warning issued yesterday, to remove southeastern parts of England and northwest Scotland, and to include Northern Ireland.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 11:25 on Wed, 24th Jul 2013 until 21:00 on Wed, 24th Jul 2013

Further thundery downpours are likely across some northeastern parts of Scotland today, although these tending to ease with time. There is also a risk of further heavy showers or thunderstorms developing over parts of Scotland, northeast England and Northern Ireland during the afternoon, before slowly dying out this evening.

The public should be aware of the risk of localised disruption to travel due to surface water flooding.
